Dear Mr. Deinlein-Kalb

I have just received you fax, which I am only able to answer now, as I have until recently Been away from the clinic attending a conference.

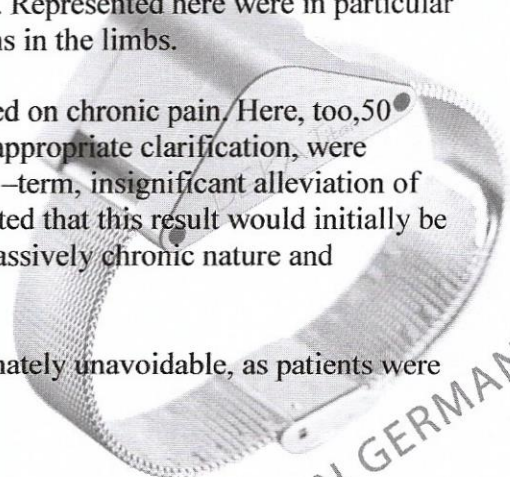

Within the framework of a double blind, non-randomised series of trial, the DE-KA Titan device was tested on consecutive patients after appropriate clarification was given and their consent obtained. To begin with, the first series of tests dealt with pain that manifested itself acutely, which was treated by application of the DE-KA device for at least 30 minutes. A success rate of 54% was achieved here in the sense of a clear improvement in the complaint, i.e. of more than 50%. Represented here were in particular complaint manifestations such as headaches and pains in the limbs.

In a second series of tests, the effectiveness was tested on chronic pain. Here, too, 50 consecutive patients, not randomised and following appropriate clarification, were included in the study. Here there was at most a short-term, insignificant alleviation of the complaint, where it was certainly not to be expected that this result would initially be any different, as the pain manifestations were of a massively chronic nature and influenced by a wide range of parameters.

I hope you will excuse the delay, which was unfortunately unavoidable, as patients were still being included in the study until recently.

Best regards from Bad Mergentheim
